Student Perspective

Here is one 3rd year student’s perspective on the Ph.D. program when asked questions about balancing family, work, and his commitment to the program:

The student writes:

“As far as time demands, it seems to have depended upon each semester’s work load. On average, I would put somewhere between 8-10 hours a week into the work. That may also fluctuate based upon how quickly you read and/or retain information. Of course, some weeks had more reading than others, and some weeks had deadlines and due dates that made things more hectic.

As for my family, I have two very active teenage children and a busy wife, and am on staff at a church with a crowded calendar. However, I can honestly say that I have not felt a sense of sacrifice or of having time taken away from the family due to school work. There have been times that have been busy, but I simply chose to stay up late and do school work rather than miss a basketball game or another part of my kids’ lives. It is as much about prioritizing as it is scheduling, and creating the time. There were some weeks where my personal schedule was busy, and I simply opted to work ahead in order to create open times.

My interest in the program stemmed from the timing of my graduation with a MABS and the start of the program two years ago. I was searching for my next educational step after Master’s work, and I met Dr. Danny Lovett at a student summer camp we were both attending, and he encouraged me to look into the program. TTU is a little over an hour from my home, so the close proximity of the campus was nice, even in Online Learning. I’ve been able to come to the campus to meet with the professors, spend time at the library, and meet with my committee chair.

What motivates me is to keep my eye on the final prize. I am motivated by the increase in opportunities as well as influence, upon completion of my degree. Also, the remaining members of our Alpha cohort have been encouragers. We all have the same graduation date in mind, so we help each other keep that in focus.

The hardest part? Keeping the level of commitment up for two solid years, with very little time off of coursework. The program has been changed somewhat since I started, however. Initially, our cohort was scheduled to stay on a specific track, which meant two courses each Fall and Spring, plus two courses in the Summer and the residency. Now, however, some of the students are taking one class each semester rather than two. That may be a necessary option for some students, but it will make the process take longer to complete. I like that this program is doable in three years.

The best part? Probably learning so much about how to increase my influence in the place where God has me, and to realize that leadership is something that can be developed. Leaders have a direct impact upon their organization, so better leaders translates to better organizations; in my case, the church. Developing relationships with my cohort has also been a blessing.”
Comments from Recent Graduates:

“It has been a great challenge to have professors and coursework that require me to think big and to think outside the box. Tennessee Temple University offered me a place to learn, grow, and excel. I offer one word of caution: the Ph.D. in Leadership program is only for people who are dedicated, practical, life-long learners that have a passion to lead this world toward a better place. My journey with Temple has helped shaped my leadership, strengthen my character, and helped me grow professionally, all from a foundation of biblical principles. TTU has a great team of instructors there!”

“As a second year Ph.D. student having completed twenty-seven hours to date, Dr. Alexson and his faculty have held me to the highest of academic standards, bringing a rare personal touch to the program, as well.”

“I would particularly compliment the collegial and highly supportive atmosphere of the program. All too often, Ph.D. programs tend to be adversarial and unsupportive. The TTU program is unique in this aspect of higher learning. There is always a significant degree of help and encouragement from the professors.”

“As a member of the initial “Alpha” cohort, I have been a firsthand witness to the early success of the program. While no academic program is perfect, the Ph.D. in Leadership at TTU has exceeded my expectations at nearly every level. God has blessed this program with quality academics, faculty, students, and a director. I would challenge any student who is considering the pursuit of a Ph.D. in Leadership to prayerfully consider Tennessee Temple University as a wonderful option for spiritual and intellectual growth.”
FAQ's about the Ph.D. in Leadership program at TTU:

What are the requirements for admission into the Ph.D. program?

-Three letters of recommendation
-A research-oriented writing sample (a paper submitted as part of Master’s program)
-Official transcripts for completed Bachelor’s and graduate degrees
-TOEFL required for all international students

Is there an entrance exam?

No, rather than make students jump through another standardized entrance exam hoop, we place high value on the student’s graduate coursework. Therefore, the completed Master’s degree is either sufficient or proof enough of ability to do graduate level work.

Describe the program delivery:

The Ph.D. program is a 60-hour online program with one five-day on-campus residency. The online courses follow an 8-week format. The normal load is two courses per semester, one during each of the 8-week terms, but students may opt to enroll in only one class per semester.

What type of classroom interface does the Leadership Program use for online courses?

We use Moodle, with a heavy emphasis on reading and writing.

Is there any flexibility with subject matter in the Ph.D. coursework?

Yes. Individual assignments within the 4 cognate courses (Contemporary Issues in Leadership I, II, III, and IV) can be tailored to reflect either Business, Education or Ministry. An “individualized track” also exists, but the flex still occurs in the cognate courses.

What are the fees for the entire program (subject to change)?

-Tuition @ 2013-14 rate ($300/credit hour) = $18,000
-Fees = ~$3,000
-Books = ~$3,000
-Total (subject to change) = $24,000

What does the profile of our Ph.D. students look like?

Our Ph.D. students come from wide backgrounds, varied ethnicities, and diverse countries. They are pastors, educators, military personnel, a university chancellor, a college president, a lawyer, a vice-president of a Fortune 500 human resources department, businessmen/women, an international consultant, a healthcare professional, an elected official, and a medical doctor.
Do you accept Federal Financial Aid?

Yes. Our Financial Aid Department will be happy to assist you with any questions you have. They can be contacted at financialaid@tntemple.edu or 423-493-4207.

Do you accept transfer credit?

Yes, a maximum of nine doctoral-level credit hours may be applied toward the Ph.D. degree. Coursework considered for transfer should not have been applied toward a degree obtained at a college or university other than Tennessee Temple University. A student must have received a grade of B or higher for any course to be considered for transfer.

What can this degree be used for professionally, besides teaching?

This degree will help the student be an effective leader- plan strategically, resolve conflict, run an organization, etc. It also allows the student to customize his/her studies to particular interests.

What about the residency?

There is one 5-day residency during the first year of the program. Students may stay in either the dorms on campus or in area hotels. The dorms are definitely the cheaper option ($50-$100 for the week), but are VERY rustic. There is no possibility for housing families on campus.

Commencement
Tennessee Temple University celebrates commencement in May. Students who have completed all necessary graduation applications, completed all courses, successfully defended the dissertation may participate in commencement.

Textbooks
Students may purchase textbooks from The Ecampus Bookstore, but have the option of acquiring their textbooks from other sources. However, the student is responsible for acquisition of the required edition of the text.

Doctoral Learning and Student Responsibility
Doctoral level learning offers a unique approach to subject, professor, and self. The fundamental difference between doctoral learning and other learning experiences is the central focus upon the student's responsibility in the learning process. Adult doctoral students are usually problem-solvers driven to get what they need from a learning experience. It is expected that the student is quite knowledgeable and experienced, perhaps even more experienced than professors in a particular area, yet feels the need for guided learning structures and fresh input. The professor's role is less that of a lecturer/presenter and more that of a facilitator, practical theorist, and/or coach.

Style Manual
Students follow the APA Publication Manual (5th or 6th edition). Modifications to this may occur at the professor's discretion.

Grading Policy
To receive a grade for a course, the student must complete ALL of the coursework. The professor reserves the right to factor into the student's grade items such as participation and interaction with faculty.

Ph.D. students with a GPA of less than 3.0 will be on academic probation. The Director evaluates each student on probation and determines whether the student continues in the program.

Academic Extensions
Professors grant "Incompletes" only in extreme cases. Tennessee Temple University's Incomplete policy grants incompletes for personal illness requiring hospitalization or prolonged medical care, death in the immediate family or natural disasters, such as floods and tornado damage to the student's home.

Grievance and Appeal Processes
The student should first contact the professor, discuss the grievance, and seek a mutually-acceptable solution. The student may submit the grievance in writing to the Director.
